

FCC and National Security

In response to the proposal calling for the removal of the Morse code requirement for all license classes, I like to say a few things:

Morse code is still a valuable mode of communications in today's environment. Morse Code might be the only mode of communicating in an emergency situation whether by blinking the eyelids (P.O.W. example) , flashing lights, clicking sounds or whatever.

In this day and age it could save our National Security. Therefore I think it's extremely important that it is required for at least the Extra Class. And that the Morse code frequencies be protected in order to keep this extremely important mode alive and well.

There are so many other reasons. But to keep it simple I've only mentioned the most important ones

Thank You

Paul Roberts
Mountain View, Ca